

I am writing to let you know that the FCC should not implement any proposal that would lessen Indiana's Telephone Privacy law protections.

The current Indiana Telephone Privacy law is the best thing that has even happened. I love that I'm not getting anymore calls from telemarketers. I am not kidding when I say I would receive between 12-24 calls per day. Yes, per day. My caller ID would have logged that many calls. Then when I would get home from work the phone would ring non-stop until around 9:00pm in the evening. I would never answer my phone, because it was always telemarketers calling. Since I've had my name added to the Indiana Call List I don't receive anymore annoying calls from telemarketers. Now when I get home from work I might have one call per week logged on my caller ID system. Now when my phone rings I don't hesitate to answer it. Please don't do anything that would set things back to the way they were or create loop holes for others to call me. I love it just the way it is.

I like that I have a choice of having my name added to a list so I don't have to receive any calls from telemarketers. Also please consider how more and more people are using their cell phone as their main phone. If a telemarketer gets your cell phone number then not only are you getting the unwanted call, but you are losing your precious minutes.

Thank you,
